Joseph C. Macaulay

Joseph C. Macaulay was born in 1900 in Belfast, Ireland, of Scottish parents and brought up in Scotland from the age of six weeks. He came to the knowledge of sins forgiven when only nine years old through the ministry of B. McCall Barbour of Edinburgh. At the age of thirteen he committed himself to the call of God for the ministry during the notable Chapman-Alexander campaign in Glasgow.

As a lad of nineteen he accompanied his parents and youngest sister to Canada, where he was almost immediately called to the pastorate of Dufferin Street Baptist Church of Toronto. There he was ordained, the council consisting of official representatives of the Toronto Baptist Association. After a season of fruitful ministry in the field of evangelism came a series of pastorates, including Wheaton Bible Church where he served for thirteen years. At Wheaton College he completed academic work begun at Glasgow University. In 1949 he was granted the Doctor of Divinity degree from Wheaton College.

The next phase of ministry was in the educational field: teacher at Moody Bible Institute, president of London College of Bible and Missions (later merged with Toronto Bible College to become Ontario Bible College), dean of Boston School of the Bible, learning the procedures of accreditation with the American Association of Bible Colleges, then dean and chancellor of New York School of the Bible.

Dr. Macaulay had an extensive ministry in the field of writing. Besides eight books, he prepared the Sunday-school lessons for the Sunday School Times and Moody Monthly over a period of twenty years.

In 1925 Macaulay married Helen Duncombe of Waterford, Ontario, whom he met during one of his evangelistic crusades there. It was nearly forty years later in London, Ontario, that the Lord took her home. For the past fifteen years he had been married to Doreen Rae of Winnipeg, Manitoba, a graduate of Ontario Bible College, where they met.

His life motto: "He must increase, but I must decrease" (John 3:30).
